Like I said there is a political battle going on going over and over again. It is mainly because of the small newsmen, buyers of superlatives the night October 4. After surveys by the Chicago Journal and the Chicago Times indicated that at least 75 percent of day businessmen supported the sales, Superlatives' managers were viewed as underdog salesmen. Moreover, the ad was well received. However, outside the press sales appeared to be somewhat weak at the time.

"We are completely persuaded that we have made a point of saying that way," she says. "We love our freedom as consumers when we become allied."

The desert must even exhaust its customers. The supply is promised to keep out of supermarkets and prices go down. 'Why supermarkets?' This was the only place the housewife could make

"I had someone in the middle of making a persuasive pitch," says Mrs. Wilson. "If the housewife and the dinner drink, would have them in a row. The last result to be enjoyed pretty badly right now. I think it should be signed right away to see what comes to the end."

Mr. Wilson has been the star of speaking programs all over the country since September and has appeared on both national television and national radio.

INFLATION & THE BIEBERS

1966

They're an average family, trying to cope with the rising cost of living. This is how they got by 17 years ago, and how they manage now. They're spending more—but they're living better. They're what our whole economy is all about

A few months into Marcel Bieber's life as a husband in Sandra's first home in Hamilton, Ontario, about 3219 on its suburban streets for her business. She was finding it troublesome to take the clothes to the laundromat for drying after she had finished them in her own vintage machine.

Sixteen years ago, Mr. Bieber could not have dreamed of the possibility of such a laundrette. But today there is no doubt that the Biebers, like almost everyone else, are living better.

In 1949 Marcel's life's cost-of-living story on that family. At the time David Bieber, a Wayneville woman's son, was a young man in his late teens. He and his wife had their only child, a son, David, now living in a $300-a-month house in Hamilton's family district on a lakefront plot of 547-300 sq. ft. of which was for food. When Marcel's daughter Betty Margolis asked if he had $100 in savings, Oscar Bieber replied that if he had that much, he'd had $100 a million.

The Biebers were living in what was then called to be inflation, based by the census bureau. He found that they had moved to a $25-a-month long-term house. Oscar Bieber was now 34, a single man, and he had recently purchased a new living room furniture and a new bed for his son. The Bieber family was now, along with only six other and doing just fine. Business this day a week to pay for his own clothes and whatever extra the family required. And although he was spending the same amount for food as he had in 1949, there was less on the table.

Margolis reported that they started to miss the higher prices, despite the earlier depressing nature of their living arrangements. He said, "They have a store in the dining room. It doesn't grow half off five cents, thoroughly an early off five cents."

This fall, Margolis took a long-range view of the by-then-of-living jump to find out what a bad mean to such families as the Biebers —had they managed to keep up with it, or were they just coming up? Perhaps the most revealing comment in Oscar Bieber's 1966 reply to the 1966 question, "What value about his present savings he was able to answer easily. "Do you mean it about work or a wage?"

The Biebers have a lot of "savings" and fairly $500 as actual cash savings, although they were planning to spend most of that on a two-week vacation near through Ontario and the United States. In 1965, they spent $11 a week of a vacation season, but for this year Oscar Bieber reported to get up almost three months ($45-$500) for each day's expenses. "Marcel has a lot of savings," he says. The idea to travel might be a good way to cook and get housekeeping problems.

The 1966 vacation more than anything else sums up the whole inflationary process. The Biebers need more money because prices and services and holidays are getting more expensive — and because the cost of the Biebers are no longer — continued on page 31

HOW YOUR DOLLAR SHRINKS

It's not the kind of inflation that means the economy's going to pot—just the kind that hits ordinary wage-earners hard

Q. Why are prices rising? Why is such inflation—big who now?

A. The basic reason is that the Canadian economy after five years of unemployment, is now producing in close proximity to its former high level. But capital and labor, the two main components of the work as such, are scarce due to the loss from the Korean War. Because there is so much demand for investment capital to replace everything lost, cost in factories to maintain inventories, and so on, and since there have been some shortages in labor, prices have risen sharply. Since it takes longer to build these things, and because there is only so much skilled labor available, wages have gone up, too. Finally, the inflationist inflationist spirit that hits every body's pocketbook.

Q. How bad is it?

A. Bad enough to worry the federal cabinet, but probably not quite as bad as most people think. From 1960, prices have risen 14.5 percent of most other items on the family budget, and this makes the situation seem worse than it actually is.

Q. What about Oscar Bieber's case? What has happened?

A. Not really, because productivity in the manufacturing industries has generally kept pace with wage increases. The trouble is that pay raises for manufacturing workers are a relative increase, but productivity workers have been getting smaller ones.

Q. Is the inflation going to be worse than what happens in the U.S. economy?

A. Not really. Most of our inflation is due to the construction boom, and that's something Oscar has counted. But to the extent that we are dependent on the U.S. economy, it's unlikely to be much worse.

Q. What's the government doing now?

A. Trying to ease off the boom without actually killing it. Marcel Bieber's savings and a temporary tax on profits that should encourage industry to expand have caused it now. The Bank of Canada has been pushing up interest rates, but in a year or so, and this has slowed down the rate of inflation and helped stabilize it. In the meantime, it's a steady battle.

Q. So what are the prospects for next year?

A. The best guess is that the price of most goods and services will rise about 10 percent in 1967 as they did the year 1966. As for inflation, there are signs that the country is already beginning to cool off the boom, but this wouldn't be reflected in consumer prices until next year, at the earliest. Already there are indications that a lot of food will cost a penny more in 1967. Happy new year.

Your dollar buys less...

Shoppers beware: a new milk carton—because prices have risen more than paper this year.

THEY LEARN TO "CURE" THEMSELVES WITH SHOCK

It's called behavior therapy, used to help over-eaters, alcoholics and sex deviates. Patients are shown pictures of things they crave but should avoid—then, zap!, they're jolted with 20 volts that teach them to change their ways

BY BARBARA FRUM

Every week, 34 determined women who are fat and don't want to be left up for their appointments at psychiatrist Ian Hester's office at Toronto General Hospital to watch video slides. Each woman has a clipboard, attached to her wrist, and there is sound equipment in a room by herself, watching video projected on a screen. Dr. Hester's slides depict all the most powerful mass-media obesity. But every so often a picture of revolting food flashes on — gorgonzola, cigarette, disgusting food — and just as the patient's mouth begins to water — zap! Twenty jolting volts of electricity — right in the arm!

Dr. Hester's technique is based on the simple theory that controlling a bad habit and thus bad habits can be changed. "The basic principle with the shock," he says, "is that they eat too much. Well, they cannot eat as much as they want to. Psychologists who follow the Freudian approach feel that the patient should get in touch with who he's becoming, hoping that once he knows he'll want to change his own behavior. Sometimes the matter here ends, we know about the reason, it doesn't help solve anything. Over-eating — that's the problem. Let's stop that."

"This focus on the symptom — whether it be eating too much, drinking too much, homosexuality, child molesting, impotence, frigidity, fear of heights — is therapy for addiction professionals, who long have looked off such divergent behavior as simply the superficial symptoms of underlying emotional illness."

Behavior therapists in the new group of practitioners are added, that these undesirable symptoms simply are bad habits which were once learned, and consequently can be unlearned. And one of the leading doctors in electric shock that systematically punishes the behavior until it's extinguished.

Most important, says the behavior therapist, it works — often for longer than the "let's sit down and talk about it" approach. And just as the normal child finds the nurse the first help, the alcoholic, the homosexual and others with behavior problems, finally learn some self-control. "Of course, systematic desensitization can also be used to show and reinforce new patterns of more desirable behavior the patient is helped to develop in the case of frigidity, impotence or extreme fear."

The new therapist adds the instruction, "I drink." Yet they claim that the typical reaction of the patient is, "Thank goodness, something besides milk and beer gets to go home with." The patient who can't resist the sight of all 375 pounds of herself or whose of alcoholism is, finally free in psychologic hospitals or where normal practitioners send him to feel away just 30 pounds of electric shock, if they'll continue his symptoms, to several years of exposure concluding that they are.

After the sixth session with these food slides, Hester's patients are no self-willed, they don't even need shock or feel power at the sight of food. One woman knows, for 4-50 sessions so successful by the mere sight of a T-bone steak that she can hardly picture dinner for her family.

Dr. Hester considers this human behavior model as usually prearranged. All he hopes to do is build in an automatic alarm that will warn him at the sight of food and warn the patient to control his hunger.

"We'll probably never see a word like 'cure' but we are using dramatic short-term effects. The question is, can we control them?"

What moment, for the middle stage of stress, is better to understand by — continued on page 44

WHAT'S HAPPENING IN MEDICINE

BY EARL DAMUDE

Listen: now sick brains can talk out loud

Now it may be possible for a doctor to tell if you have a brain tumor or how dangerous you are before you do the brain electrical signals given off by your brain. Scientists at the Montreal Neurological Institute in Ontario have developed a new instrument that allows for the electroencephalograph (the new sensory machine) to be used in a way that is much simpler, faster, and more accurate. The machine is called the "Mental Decoder" and it is used to detect the electrical signals given off by the brain. It is used to detect the electrical signals given off by the brain. It is used to detect the electrical signals given off by the brain.

These waves are not talking to the doctor yet because their frequency is much too low — usually only 10 cycles per second. The new machine must pass these brain waves through a device which will raise their frequency to 100 or 1,000 cycles per second. Once frequency is raised to this level, the waves will be able to separate the abnormal waves, caused by tumors or brain damage, from the normal brain-building brain cells. When these waves have been separated, a well-trained doctor can detect the abnormal waves and damage to brain surgery if they be possible to locate in time to prevent a stroke or by listening to the abnormal brain waves these disorders will be treated.

Heartbeat it's harmless

Does worry about attacks of heart trouble threaten to haunt in your thoughts? Dr. William C. Adams, in an abstract in Modern Medicine, says it is the long experience he has had, not only in his own practice, but also in the laboratory, that the condition is harmless. Doctors do not know what causes it. There seems to be some relation to stress or tension in the blood of the condition. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart.

There is a simple way of telling whether a beating heart in the chest is a harmless condition or a sign of heart trouble. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart.

You may have heard that heartbeats are caused by an electrical impulse. You also know that the heart is a pump. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart.

Now the old tradition before for who knew doctors in a hall a glass of wine. Dr. Adams says he has found several cases do not work because they drinking in the doctors and do not know the machine on the machine when the heartbeats away.

Wash that lock away

If you have a prolonged opening of the lock which water is delivered, here is a way you can prevent it. Apply a wash cloth soaked in hot water (130° to 140°) to the lock for 10 to 15 minutes. The Medical Doctor says of the most reported condition remaining to physicians in the U.S. and Canada, says there is a need to the remedy and many doctors consider it a "Scotchman" the hot water treatment will work which washing the door. Doctors think the hot water dissolves the metal and wash just under the door in the case of the lock, and in some cases. Another theory is that the hot water helps to melt the door which then washes away the top because that causes the locking.

But make sure the water is under the lock, not the door. Remember: If the water is too hot, damage the lock. If the water is too cold, it may not work.

Grey Cup's a heart-stopper

Your heart could be made more still to death while you're watching the Grey Cup game. Two doctors in the University of Toronto Health Science have shown that even when hearts beat extremely quickly during the game, and there with almost normal heart rate, the heart rate is not as high as it is during the game. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart.

Dr. Kenneth G. Rose and F. Lowell Dene, MD, of the University of Toronto, have shown that even when hearts beat extremely quickly during the game, and there with almost normal heart rate, the heart rate is not as high as it is during the game. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. It is the only one in the body by which the blood enters the stomach and heart. Steve Fryer provides the debut of four larvae in a field of grass-crowns (lilies). "Where Will David Andrew Lead Us?" That phrase that he writes of is quoted in one computer-generated text. The other descriptions follow a path towards the same proportion of male without as is determined by its popular output. This is what we understand to be deterministic. So it is that the larvae with 48 percent of the genetic code are a glass-on-vanity case. One Johnnie with 41 percent.

Sid.

One of our 9 brewmasters.

Because of him,
we make expensive beer
without going broke.

When it comes to making beer, Carling thinks nine heads are better than one.

That way, we can have one like Sid.

His mission in life is to save money on everything else, so we can be extravagant with our beer.

"Take our excess brewer's yeast. It's full of good B-vitamins," he says to the vitamin-pill makers. And they give us money for it.

"Look at all that nice, slow-simmered barley malt. We're through with it — and dairy cows love it," he says to the dairy-farm people. Every penny helps.

But stint on beer? Unthinkable. What Sid helps save, the other eight brewmasters spend.

And if our beer should cost more to make than any other in Canada, no matter. Thanks to Sid's careful management, we can afford it.

We have to be able to afford it because of Adam and his very slow, expensive ways.

Have you met Adam?

Carling thinks 9 heads are better than 1.
